

STEPS YOU CAN TAKE TO PARTICIPATE IN MG RESEARCH STUDY

ASK YOUR DOCTOR

Consult with your doctor or neurologist to learn about research studies that may be the right fit for you. He or she knows about your condition and can give appropriate suggestions and recommendations.

RESEARCH ONLINE

You can visit www.clinicaltrials.gov, a database maintained by the National Institutes of Health of research studies conducted around the world.

To find current MG clinical research studies:

- Select status option "recruiting"
- Enter your search terms -- for example, either by disease name "myasthenia gravis" other terms, or by specific location

REVIEW AND DISCUSS

- Not every clinical trial is right for you. Once you find a research study that may be of interest to you, it is important to discuss with your doctor and or with a family member before you make the decision to participate.
- It is also critical that you review the research study and understand the purpose, and eligibility requirements.

CONTACT RESERACH STUDY SITE

After finding a research study that may be right fit for you, contact the study team that is listed. If they feel you meet the criteria to participate, they will set up an appointment to invite you to come in for further screening.
